

reads the 32-bit word `old` located at the address `address` in global or shared memory, computes $(\text{old} - \text{val})$, and stores the result back to memory at the same address. These three operations are performed in one atomic transaction. The function returns `old`.